It's Showtime

by C. Brandon Redding

In the mood for a good scary movie? You may have found yourself at home alone on a Saturday night, and you swear that if you have to see one more Sandra Bullock or Tom Cruise romance movie, you're going to throw up that $12.99 pepperoni pizza you just scarfed down during the commercials breaks of Dawson's Creek. After all, Joey may finally realize that Pacey is in love with her. If so, I think you're in for a much needed night of homicidal college students, psychic ten year olds, or houses that come to life and devour it's inhabitants.

•Scream 1 and 2: With part 3 in the theatres right now, how can you possibley not catch up on the first two installments. They should become your two best friends on those lonely Saturday nights.

•Urban Legends: If you're not all "sliced out," here's another good slasher movie you should check out. The first five minutes are worth the whole $3.49 you pay for rental.

•The Sixth Sense: Will you jump out of your seat and be scared to go to sleep? Probably not, but it's a good flick.

•The Haunting: I may be the only person alive that liked this movie, but I felt that it was well written and delivered. It's definately worth taking a look at if you haven't already.

Other Recommendations:
•Stigmata
•I Know What You Did Last Summer
•House On Haunted Hill